Group Identity

> Within the system of exploitation and oppression, the need for direct action and organisation emerges. The need for direct action and critical thinking appears in relation to the modern culture that promotes and perpetuates the exploitation of humman on human, dehumanization, isolation, economic inequality, alienation, apathy and spectacular confusion brought the need for a political group.
> Within the political strand, the APA mainly revolves around the thought of social anarchism, operating in an anti-hierarchical and non-democratic way. Part of the wider libertarian movement and continuators of anarchist and libertarian thought, the necessity of organizing through political groups appears to us. Political organizations are the ground for developing critique against the dominant ideology and hegemony. It is the ground for direct resistance to capital and the state and support and perpetuation of local and international social struggles. […] We are part of society and not its leaders and we do not possess the truth, the truth is possessed only by the religious and the stupid. The social revolution is the affair of society and society alone, we simply feel the need to accelerate it. Society is a boiling cauldron ready to overflow, and when it does, we must be ready to move on to full social transformation, to a society that operates at the level of autonomy, self-organisation, solidarity and economic equality.[1)]
